A profitable home business of your own! A great idea for men and women... and time for you to do something about it. The question you've probably been asking is what kind of a home business and how do I get started?

A few years ago I was asking the same questions. A friend suggested the Import-Export business... made to order for the person who wants to operate from home in spare hours. My total capital was less than $100. Starting with such meager resources and learning the hard way... I've made a fortune in Import-Export. My business employs dozens of people and takes in million of dollars each year.

Everything I learned along the way I put into my new home business plan... the very same plan that has helped many ambitious men and women to success and profits in their own home business. I welcome the opportunity to give you the same kind of help. Using my easy short cuts I invented and perfected I will show you how to make your dreams of a fine "second income" or retirement business come true and have all the fun in the world doing it!

My Plan introduces you to leading suppliers abroad... shows you how and what to import for bigger profits... shows you how to buy below wholesale and practically eliminate competition... shows you how to offer imports by mail order and to local buyers who are ready and waiting for dazzling bargains like I show you here.

There are no costly middlemen to rat up profits. You deal direct so every dollar of profit you make... you keep! I travel many weeks a year and do all your world wide product searching for you. I enjoy hundreds of close lifetime friendships with important suppliers in the Orient, Europe, South America and the near East. These overseas business friends are eager to sell their products to you... in quantities or just one import at a time. Language is never a problem; English is the universal language of business.

Don't worry if you are short of money as I was when I started. My famous Drop Ship Plan starts you with little or no product investment. You can pocket profits even before you order products.

You can deal in one product or many. You will use my own personal success methods for getting highly profitable orders from nearby stores, premium buyers, friends and other individuals. I will reveal how to offer your imports by mail order.

For a fast start I'll send you six valuable Trade Agreements that open the doors instantly to special consideration with important suppliers. You deal in many imports that are such fantastic bargains you sell for rock bottom prices and still make 200% and more profit. You can begin taking orders right away because I'll also send you 8 free import samples complete with information to order from suppliers overseas. Now you see how my Plan puts into your hands everything you need to start profits coming in fast!

As a bonus you will become a member of International Trader's, a world-wide organization of importers and exporters banded together to help each other make money. Membership opens opportunities for special import values the non-member never hears about!

Is there an age limit to this home business? Not at all! I've helped teenagers succeed and I'm pleased to see how many senior citizens have found independence and security through my Plan. You can operate from anywhere: city, town or in the country.

Is Import-Export for you? Let's find out together. See for yourself how the import boom works to the special advantage of the home business operator. My book, "How to Import and Export" is free. It presents facts as they are. The coupon below brings this book to you at once. No obligation of any kind and no salesman will call. I tell you in plain words how beginners have made big money following my proven Plan. You owe it to yourself to get this important information right away. Airmail reaches me overnight.

B. L. Mellinger, Jr., Famous

He has traveled around the world many times in his product searches. He is an internationally known lecturer, famous in more than 50 countries. FOR EASY
SEX - JUST TAKE THE BUS

Men-hungry women have turned the nation's stream of buses into bordellos on wheels. If you're in the market for a fast romance, the bus is your best bet. You meet all shapes, all sizes—and all willing!

by GENE CHANNING

LAST call for Bus 212, now loading for Baltimore and Washington," droned the coldly impersonal voice of the dispatcher. "Passengers will please check in at Gate 6."

Struggling with two oversize suitcases, a cute, corsaged blonde staggered from a cab at New York's Port Authority Terminal recently, and raced through the crowded waiting room just as the gate man was pulling down the Special "212" sign.

"Hold the gate!" she screamed. "Please wait!"

She made ■ aboard, stood panting beside the driver and looked around for a seat. Outside, her husband waved ■ handkerchief. It was a cool spring night—cool enough for an overcoat, or looked at from the blonde's amorous proclivities, cool enough for a man's caressing hand.

"Is this seat occupied?" the blonde smiled faintly. She wore a tight velvetine sheath under an expensive coat. Her dress was unusually low cut. I said the seat was unoccupied. She sat down, and as her husband was still waving, I offered her the window seat. Lovingly she pressed her face to ■, smiling and nodding her head. A few moments later the grinding ■ gears heralded our odyssey. And ■ was to really be an epic odyssey at that.

The story was American highways and byways, and what happens when there's two on a bus, with the same thought in mind. Uniquely, the blonde came under the general heading ■ "research"—a distinct pleasure of which there are too few around for a wandering reporter. She pulled out a small flask, offered me ■ cigarette and settled down. "My name's Betty K—," she smiled. "And this is the first vacation I'm going on without the 'anchor.'"

She took a nip and passed the bottle. Bourbon. She was wearing Joy, and the sultry fragrance of it wafted over me like a cloud of velvet. By the time we'd reached the tunnel, I knew a good deal more about Mrs. K— and her long contemplated vacation. Her hand touched mine. The bus was dark. I leaned over and kissed her, and she responded hungrily.

We spent a torrid week together.

WHEN we bussed back to New York, her husband met her at the terminal. She threw her arms around him and actually cried with joy. "Dear," she said. "I'd like you to meet Mr. Channing. He was so nice to me in Washington. The hotels were overcrowded and he gave me his room—"

"I can't thank you enough," Mr. K— beamed. He said he never saw his wife looking better. "The vacation agreed with you. You're a new woman, dear!"

"I guess I am!" Betty K— smiled wistfully. "By, Mr. Channing—and thanks again."

I wandered off. Two nights later, I caught another bus.

A Boston travel agent, when quizzed on the sudden popularity of highway transportation explained:

"For a fast romance, a man can't get a better deal than by travelling in a bus. He meets ■ kinds, all shapes and sizes."

Judging from a comprehensive piece of research, this reporter is compelled to agree. It may take a while to get where you're going, but with female companionship such as it is these days who, as the man says, is in any damned big hurry?

Further, many travel agents close their case: "You see more, the driver 'sees' nothing, and there just isn't any cheaper means of transportation. . ."

Getting anywhere—any highway—from glorified "66" to the frigid, picturesque Alcan, ■ a man needs is time, ticketing and a passable knowledge of judo. The women do the rest.

NOT long ago Frank R—, an ex-Marine and long-time friend, decided to take a high-powered TV bus commercial at face value. Six-one and a hazel-eyed copy of Rock Hudson, Frank had only fifteen days to kill. Nevertheless, he plunked down his hundred plus for a round trip, New York-Miami excursion, and boarded his bus.

The basic rules of propriety preclude the detailing here of his junket to the land of milk and honey, but a few grisly items can safely be repeated. One was the fact that, no sooner had he parked his body in a reclining seat on the aisle beside a young and vigorous widow, Mr. R— was "claimed for duration."

Above the protests of thirty-four (by count) female competitors, the widow legged Frank into swapping seats with her so that, seemingly, Frank was firmly corralled against the window.

Not exactly an unwilling subject, naturally, since the widow was barely twenty-five and built along Lorenish lines, Frank did his best to stay attentive for three days and nights—nights, since hotel reservations, according to seating plan, made it convenient for adjacent numbers to sleep in "adjacent" rooms. The long, the short of it, in that understuffed romance chariot, was a simple case of too few Frank R—'s to go around.

"Don't tell me your troubles, mister," the blue-suited driver told the ex-Marine. "At first I thought I was in paradise—now I'd give my eye teeth to be transferred to a short line. I'm wore out!"

In part, this should explain much of the current off-color attraction to some men and many more women on the love parade—an endless stream of luxury buses that sally forth from the nation's terminals 365 days every year. Curiously, there isn't much that can be done about it either. Business ■ business, certain offending company officials say complacently. "We supply the conveyance, they're supposed to supply the morals."

"If untold thousands of American women choose to travel in buses, the man who rides the same bus wittingly does so at his own risk. After all, everybody, damned near, gets aboard at the same terminal. . ."

AND that's the commercial attitude to one of the shocking, hitherto undisclosed gimmicks for loose morality which is prevalent today. In a nutshell, (say these same characters) if the number of lonesome gals terrifies a man, he can turn right around, cash in his ticket and hop a plane. Needless to say, very few—if any—do.

Why it ■ that more women than men enjoy the scenic route is a matter of conjecture. Some say budget, the notion that they might meet someone, and the relaxed informality appeal to the female sex. This may or may not be, but no matter what the reasons, real or conjectural, women comprise two-thirds of the average bus line's passenger list.

And any man who refuses to face up to the likelihood of getting (at first) pleasantly roughed up, is strictly deluding himself. Obviously, not all women bus riders are barracudas, but a goodly number of them are. Given the slightest encouragement—and in a lot of cases no encouragement whatever—they hungrily take the hook.

IN the days before reclining seats, turret domes and double-decks, handling a passenger load was ■ relatively painless job, according to million-mile veteran George P— of Washington.

Today's fierce transportation competition puts a different complexion on promiscuity on the bus line. Or to quote the same gent as before, "We supply the conveyance, they're supposed to supply the morals."

Hotel arrangements, according to bus seating plans, make it convenient for adjacent numbers to sleep in "adjacent" rooms. And that's when things really start to churn.

All a man needs is ticket. Women do the real. Officials shrug off wanton behavior. "Conveyance, not morals is our job."

Unfortunately, it doesn't quite work out as blue-printed. Because of the constant struggle to make a buck there is a growing reticence on the part of many lines to enforce at least a basic moral code. "It's tough enough trying to stay in business," one interstate operator observed. "Why the hell should I play nursemaid?"

Late last summer when large groups of matronly tourists coursed Route 90 for New Orleans, a twenty-five-year-old Korean vet, Jimmy H——, tall, strapping and flat broke after buying his ticket at Dallas, came away from his long ride with a story that sounded fantastic beyond belief to the untrained ear. To veteran drivers willing to concede that "very much goes" in a rolling express, it did not. Nor was it revolting to that hard core of riders who use the buses to promote their social life.

Seated in the rear section among a group of women, supposedly educators, none younger than fifty, there commenced the morbid little game of trying to see which of the matrons could rock the young Army vet's cradle nightly.

A good hook works with amazing agility. In some cases, the victim doesn't even know he's been touched. When a man keeps his wallet in his back pocket, it's the easiest possible invitation to the pickpocket. So long as attention is not attracted to himself, he can move up behind, reach out, and with a swift, light touch, take the wallet and move back. Not one victim in ten knows.

THE MAN WAS STANDING in the crowded bus, returning home after a long, hard day at work. He was tired, and annoyed with the world. The jam-packed press of his fellow sufferers during that rush hour ride certainly wasn't improving his disposition. Like a million or so others, he was attempting to pass the time by reading his newspaper.

He wasn't succeeding very well. In front of him was a man who seemed to be a raving lunatic. No matter how he turned, leaned or backed away, the stranger's arms, elbows and shoulders poked at the paper, practically pushing it up into his face.

The weary traveller was getting angry. Finally, as his annoyner elbowed him in a vicious manner, he turned slightly to glare at him. He was wondering whether or not he'd be justified in poking the fellow right in his nasty face.

The bus was slowing down for a stop. To increase his discomfort, a little fellow was trying to wriggle past behind him, toward the exit. He felt a slight nudge in his back, but that was minor compared to the torture he was already enduring. Automatically, he leaned slightly forward to allow the man behind to get through. As he did so, he stared at his paper-jostling antagonist, hostile anger showing clearly in his eyes.

And it worked, too. The clumsy passenger cringed away under his angry gaze. As suddenly as he had begun, he stopped his pokes and jabs. Our man smiled contentedly to himself. He'd shown the crazy character. No one was going to push him around. He went back to his sports page in peace. When he looked up again, some five minutes later, his assaulter had vanished.

But something else had vanished, too, although he didn't discover it until he arrived home. His wallet, along with his entire week's pay, had gone the way of all unguarded possessions. Somewhere, somehow, a pair of pickpockets were busily enjoying the fruits of our angry sucker's hard labor.

The scene described above is so typical that it's hardly worthy of notice. In New York City alone, more than 1000 similar incidents take place every day of the week. In other cities and towns across the country, the figures are proportionately the same.

Wherever crowds gather—subways, busses, ball parks, parades, civic events—even in church—the hooks are busy, their nimble fingers deftly reaching into the pockets of their neighbors, extracting without fuss or bother, the stores of accumulated cash.

The technique is startlingly simple. It's been worked with huge success for hundreds, no, thousands of years. And because of its very simplicity, it's not likely to change very much in the foreseeable future.

For the most part, pickpockets work in groups, usually of two or three. While the stall stations himself in front of the selected victim, distracting him, keeping his mind

THE MADMAN OF McKENZIE ISLAND

by FRED ALBION

I LOOKED AT KATIE and grinned. She had long blonde hair, a rippling young figure that made men stare, and the glowing smile of a woman in love. For an instant, I savored the memory of her shivering desire in the cabin just several hours before, at dawn. Then I grinned again, for I was the luckiest ex-gerene in the world to have married Katie Diamant. We'd met in Singapore only five weeks ago, and this was the eighth day of our honeymoon cruise. We were sailing close to the Sulu Archipelago, in the Jolo Strait.

Suddenly, the grating voice of her brother Pieter brought me out of my reverie. "Snap out of it man! You're running too damn close to the shore!"

"Sorry," I said quietly. He was right.

As if he read my thoughts, Pieter continued. "Hell, man, you know these waters are poorly charted. They're full of half-sunken ships that could rip our bottom like so much cardboard."

"You should listen to Pieter," Katie whispered softly. "He has sailed here before, and has told me about..."

"The sharks and the reefs and the headhunters," I interrupted confidently. "Yeah, I've heard his whole pitch. So he's right. But it's a sunny day and I'm on my honeymoon with the most beautiful and passionate woman in the whole world. So I should worry?"

Katie blushed.

"I heard you two sighing and groaning last night," Pieter chimed in. "Fun is fun, but it has nothing to do with the foolishness of sailing only two miles from the islands!"

"We should never have taken this nervous brother of yours on our honeymoon," I teased my new bride. She didn't know how serious I was.

"But it's half his boat, Fred. And besides, it takes three to run a 48-footer like this."

Maybe they're right, I thought as I started to pull away from the white beach which glistened off starboard. The Diamants had been born on their father's plantation in Sumatra, and both of them knew a hell of a lot about this part of the Pacific. I finally yielded to their hard-headed Dutch reason. But it was too late!

At that instant, I saw the jagged coral teeth of the reef. I swung the wheel hard, in a desperate effort to avoid it.

"We're going to hit!" I yelled.

There was a horrible grinding sound. The Dancing Lady rode up on the uncharted reef, hung there and shuddered. Even as I cursed my stubborn stupidity, water spouted from two huge holes in the trim hull. Pieter wasn't wasting his time swearing. He was busy tossing supplies to Katie, who deftly stowed them in the dinghy. The sea was gushing in faster now—I barely had time to tap out a curt S.O.S. before I was up to my knees in water.

"Come on!" Pieter shouted.

At the last minute, I grabbed the shotgun and a Very Pistol. Then I scampered back across a deck that was almost awash and hopped into the life boat, just as my muscular brother-in-law cut her loose. We pulled on the oars for a few minutes before I turned around for a final look at the Lady. I bit my lip as I watched her roll over.

I didn't know what to say and Pieter was too angry to speak. We pointed the dinghy for the palm covered island and rowed in silence. We didn't know the name of the place, whether it was inhabited, or who owned the obscure hunk of tropical real estate. It was land and safety, so we rowed.

WE HIT THE BEACH at low tide about an hour later, and Pieter helped me pull the boat up on the sand, beyond the reach of the breakers. It was 11:50 A.M. on the clear, bright morning of September 26, 1953, and we were shipwrecked somewhere between Zamboanga and Borneo. I wondered whether Katie and I would ever make the Philippines, and the job that was waiting.

I was brushing the sand from my hands, when suddenly Pieter let out a blood-curdling shriek! I whirled to face him and saw that he was doubled-up in agony! An arrow protruded, quivering from his chest. Another feathered shaft winged silently past to bury itself in his throat! He writhed in pain for a few seconds, then convulsed in a final paroxysm as blood spurted from his lips.

Katie shook with horror, staring wide-eyed in the sudden form that had been her brother. She opened her mouth to scream, but no sound came forth.

Before I could dash for the lifeboat, which still held my shotgun, a voice grated behind me. I must have jumped three feet!

"My name is Ljudal. I am the Sultan of McKenzie Island."

I spun on my heel to face the biggest man I'd ever seen! A hulking giant almost seven feet tall, he was wearing a straw hat, white linen shorts and leather sandals. His skin was burned amber by the tropical sun, but his accent and blue eyes told me that he was Scandinavian. He might have been handsome, but three S-shaped scars on his right cheek now puckered his face.

"She beautiful woman," he observed with a nod to my dazed bride. "She I will enjoy!"

He's stark raving mad, I realized. But he was probably the only European on the island—we'd need every bit of help we could get against the natives who'd already butchered Pieter.

"My name's Fred Albion and this is my wife," I said slowly, hoping that this gigantic lunatic would understand if I uttered such word superlatives. "We were wrecked when our schooner piled up on the reef." My voice rose with frustration. "The natives have killed my brother-in-law, as you can see, and we need your help to get to safety."

The huge ugly face broke into a twisted smile.

"I am Sultan. All women must please me. The men die."

Then I saw the bow and arrow strapped to his back, and I understood.

So did Katie—there were no natives on the island.

Katie's face was spotted with fury and fear. Again she opened her mouth to speak, but still no words came.

"Long time ago I came here. I am Sultan," he started again. "Big storm bring me. I find McKenzie and wife. McKenzie I kill—wife my first woman. He first sacrifice to me, Ljudal. Others sent to me on water, but I sacrifice all men. I have many women."

I started to edge back towards the boat where I'd left the shotgun. It was our only chance with this sinister madman.

"My women must please me, else they not eat. Those who know most tricks of love live better, so they try hard to make new kind of love. I am Sultan."

"You killed Pieter!" Katie's voice suddenly tore loose in fury.

"Sacrifice to Sultan," he agreed, prodding Pieter's corpse cruelly with his foot. "Now you be sacrifice!"

I turned and ran for the gun, but the giant was upon me in three incredible bounds! He grabbed me with one big hand, spun me around and lifted me high into the air. As big as I am, he handled me like a toy. Then, shouting an unintelligible sound, he slammed me down on the beach.

All the wind was knocked out of me. I was sure that three or four ribs were broken, but I tottered to my feet. He wasn't going to kill me, not after half the soldiers in Japan had failed. And he wasn't going to rape my wife either.

I tried to clear my head, but the big bastard didn't give me a chance. The next thing I knew, his fist rammed into my stomach like a battering-ram. Then he punched me in the face. I crumpled to my knees, spitting teeth and feeling blood trickle down my torn lip.

"Now you die!" I heard him say. I looked up and saw a huge foot coming straight for my head. I blacked out. . . .

IT WAS NEARLY DARK when I opened my eyes. I was sprawled on the beach, and the sand near my head was stained with my blood. I'd taken a terrible pounding, more than any man could be expected to endure.

The tide was washing over my legs—that was what had awakened me. Then I realized the giant had left me for dead.

Katie! The crazy bastard had Katie, and I knew damned well what he was going to do. I tried to get up, but the effort made me spit blood. I lay there helplessly while the sea rose higher. In a while the salt water reached my head, stinging the open flesh and filling my mouth and throat. I was drowning in two inches of water! I got up on one elbow, but that was all I could do. The tide kept coming in—relentlessly—higher and higher, pulling at my aching body.

I don't know how long it was, but suddenly I was floating! I was drifting out to sea, and the hulking maniac who called himself the Sultan of McKenzie Island had Katie! I tried to paddle back to shore, but I was much too weak to do more than stay afloat.

Then I saw it.

The boat—the dinghy from the Dancing Lady was drifting only a few yards away! I had to reach her. Drawing on every bit of feeble strength, I ignored my screaming ribs and started to swim. After minutes of agonizing frustration, I caught her line and pulled myself aboard. Coughing blood, gasping, I sat on the floor fighting dizziness. Hungry, thirsty and exhausted, I slumped back and passed out again.

From behind a cloud, the moon rose in a black Pacific sky. I regained consciousness and got up on my hands and knees to stare over the water, and at that moment the boat jarred to a halt! The prow was caught between two rocks on the tip of a small promontory, but I

The Temple Treasure of ANKOR VAT

We had worked too hard to find the rubies to let our enemies take them away from us without a hard fight!

by ANDREW McLEAN

JERRY WAS lying dead in a million dollar mountain of rubies while Lydia and Carol were out there, someplace, in the jungle. Me—if I wasn't as badly off as Jerry, it was just a matter of time. I figured that any second I was going to be stopped dead in my tracks with a 8mm slug between my shoulder blades. Running was never one of my better abilities and now even walking was an agonizing effort. My left leg felt as if it were made out of boiling oatmeal. It had blown up to twice normal size and was changing colors faster than an excited chameleon. I didn't know what to do first, try to make it back to the boat where the jewels were stashed, or attempt to locate the two girls. Don't get me wrong. I'm no Sir Walter Raleigh when it comes to broads, but my leg needed attention and quick, or I'd never live long enough to spend any of the loot we'd lifted. I sure as hell couldn't take care of the damn thing myself, so that left the girls as the only other nominees.

From the preliminary scouting we did before heading into the Ankor Vat I knew there was an abandoned city about a mile and a half west of the river. That's where the girls should have gone. So I started slithering, crawling and hobbling in the general direction of Ankor Thom.

After about two hours and ten pounds of blood, flesh and sweat, I finally found the snake ridden place. Now I had to gather my senses, try to ignore the pain and get some needed rest before starting to search for my two curvy cohorts. The jungle had already covered most of the city with a green camouflage that made it an ideal hiding place. I found a nice comfortable spot with as few migrating lizards as possible and world-wide reputations as unsatisfactory lovers comes from the fact that as far as sexual proficiency is concerned, they couldn't care less.

The American male is mightily interested in sex, of course, but so is a pre-kindergarten child interested in books. The lot tackles a tome without any understanding of the words, liking the pictures and getting a charge out of flipping the pages as he's seen grown people do. It's true he gets something out of it, but his approach can scarcely be described as educated. He is basically as baffled as American men who, while foreigners are doing graduate work in the gentle arts of waylaying, wooing, and winning a woman, are content to muddle along in grade school.

Men in this country have an extremely lethargic approach to sex. Statistically, they are healthier than any men in the world—in a physical sense—and are on the average taller, stronger, and better-looking than their foreign counterparts. It's good raw material, but they don't do anything with it. They are satisfied that this equipment, activated by a highly volatile libido, cancels out the need for charm, manners, finesse, conversation, and a knowledge of titillating techniques when it comes to making love. To them it's just an incidental activity to be engaged in for their own gratification, and they smugly assume that what's good enough for them should be delightful for their women.

They couldn't be more wrong. Psychiatrists, marriage counselors, and the judges and juries in divorce actions hear the same old complaint from women over and over: "My husband doesn't know what love is—all he knows is his lust. He acts like a primitive savage who's suddenly discovered a defenseless woman." American men just can't be bothered learning how to give pleasure; they just act instinctually to take it.

How important is this skill which he is too lazy to achieve? According to Philip Wylie, the son of a minister and a medical student who went on to become the famous author of An Essay on Morals and Generation of Vipers, "Good loving takes learning." In the essay, Virginity and Pre-Marital Sex Relations, he writes: "... I once pointed out that

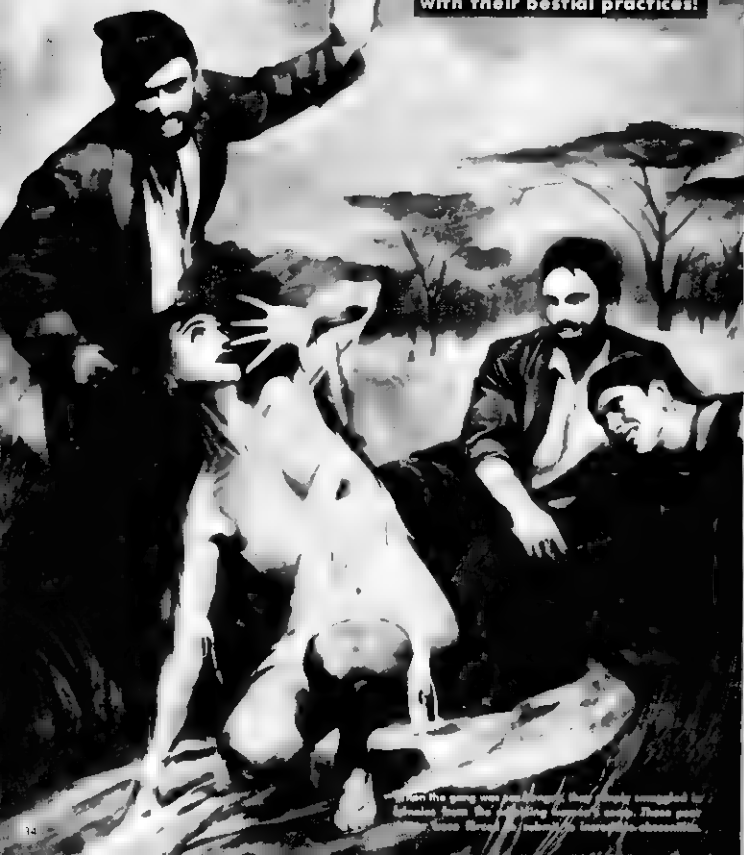

If the American male had given the same attention to industrial, scientific, and cultural advancement that he has to manners, courtship, and the art of love-making, we'd probably still be living in log cabins and running around in coonskin caps.

Our men have long been human dynamos when it comes to exploring new geographical frontiers and creating and building material things, but they're the laziest men in the world when it comes to learning anything at all about women and the refinements of sex. Compared to civilized foreign males who regard lovemaking as an art to be assiduously studied and practiced, like painting or music, American males are indolently "hacking it," and frustrating their women. Their

"I WAS A MEMBER OF A PRISON RAPE GANG!"

PIERCING SCREAMS of agony echoed in the foul air of our barracks in the Nizhny Tagilsk labor camp. They pulsed through the triple-decked bunks, where prisoners feigned sleep under vermin-ridden blankets made out of old burlap bags. I too turned over on my bunk to face the wall swarming with cockroaches the size of field mice. But a rough hand shook me impatiently.

"Get up, Grelas," a hoarse voice rasped. "We've got a Nasidka singing. The Zakon is meeting now..."

I followed Mitya Bondarenko, a burly gangster from Rostov, doing time for armed robbery and rape, to a corner of the barracks near the Parasha bucket that was normally used as a lavatory.

A naked man cowered on the floor, surrounded by a circle of grim-faced prisoners.

"Please let me go, Bratsy," he whined piteously, blood streaming down his chin. "I have not betrayed you, I swear I am innocent. I have a wife and children at home, I want to see them again..."

Vasya Plzdyuk, his toothless mouth agape in a hideous grin, poked a ham-sized fist into the man's scrotum and gave it a corkscrew twist.

The wail of mortal anguish which pierced the crudelog walls of our barracks was no longer human, but no one heard it outside in the howling Siberian blizzard which swept our stockade in the Ural mountains, south of the picturesque Tura River, which was now harnessed by a dam built by slave labor.

By now, I accepted such bestial torture as a matter of course. Nasidka is a police informer in Russian underworld slang, and Zakon is the dreaded tribunal of mobsters and hoodlums, who act as judge, jury and executioner to enforce solidarity of gangsters behind prison walls.

The intended victim, his body covered with welts and ugly bruises, was a man about fifty years old. A chief accountant in a Moscow textile plant, he had falsified delivery orders and stole goods (Continued on page 49) and his emotions directed away from his money, the hook deftly slips in behind and in a matter of seconds has lifted his cash. The touch is "no gentle, no sure, that it takes an expert to even be aware that any funny business is going on.

ART OF PICKING POCKETS

Almost instantly thereafter, the hook disposes of his task, passing it on to a confederate. Thus, if the victim should realize that he's been taken, the hook can righteously demand that he be searched. It's a cold-blooded acrobat who can maintain his anonymity after such a search has disclosed no incriminating evidence.

THE AVERAGE HOOK is a small, unobtrusive man. His size is an invaluable asset when he's slipping through a crowd, fanning the backs of the men to see where they keep their money.

Not so the stall, however. Two small men together would stand out too obviously in a crowd. As a result, the usual stall tends to be "average." And that phrase, average, fits him in every way—height, weight, build, hair, eyes, face and coloring. An attempt to describe him to the police would be an exercise in total frustration. Your complaint would fit uncountable other Americans.

Some stalls, however, are particularly distinguished looking. The bank operators, for example. These men, with looks and dress that would do credit to the most successful business executive, ply their trade by idling at a bank desk, apparently occupied in filling out a deposit slip.

Sooner or later, a legitimate bank customer comes along. He makes a business withdrawal. An "executive" observes carefully, especially noting where the victim places his money.

The victim leaves and the stall moves right along behind him through the bank door. As he enters the street, he takes out his handkerchief, mops his brow, then replaces it in his pocket. That's the signal to his confederate—the handkerchief goes into the identical pocket in which the victim's loot is stored.

As the first stall disappears, the confederates take over, following their sucker. If the victim enters the "hole" or grabs a "short," some time during his journey he will be "accidentally" bumped by a hurrying salesman carrying a briefcase. Or else, if the victim walks down the street, he will be jarred from the rear by an uncouth stranger, and bumped right into the arms of that same briefcase-carrying "salesman." That's all it takes.

But the best break of all would come if the unwary target happened to pass through a revolving door.

Then, accidentally, the "salesman" would move into the same compartment with him. Suddenly, the stall behind would wedge the door. The hook would suddenly become frantic, waving his arms and shouting for help. In a moment, naturally, the door is freed, and everyone relaxes. But that's the end of the victim's money—at least as far as the victim is concerned.

The success of any pickpocket combination depends entirely on the ability of the hook. A really smooth-operating cannon can "earn" well over $1000 a week.

The term cannon, by the way, has a particularly interesting derivation. It originated on New York City's lower east side—though by now it has spread across the nation. In the Jewish idiom, the word for thief is gunavil. This was shortened to gun, and as the non-Jewish group picked up the word, it became gun. A successful hook was a big gun—and a big gun is a cannon. Simple!

But then, pickpockets have always gone in for colorful cant.

When a cannon begins to lose his touch, there is always something for him to fall back upon, which requires much less skill—Moll Buzing. While men take some precautions with their cash—at least they keep it in a pocket on their person—women have a habit of ignoring their bills as completely as if they didn't exist.

RECENTLY, THE HEAD of New York City's Pickpocket squad, Daniel J. Campion, stationed himself in one of the large department stores during a big sale. As he described it, the woman marched into the store, "their expressions grin, their purses clutched securely."

But as they approached the counter, their tune looks faded. Every thought seemed to disappear except for their concentration on "bargains." Nine out of every ten even went so far as to put their purses down on the counter, thus freeing their hands to examine the merchandise.

It seemed almost insane, yet Campion knew from experience that women invariably react in the same manner, despite repeated warnings by police officials.

For the Moll Buzzer, such a mistake is the answer to a prayer. The cannon merely wanders over to the same counter and drops a bit of merchandise over the purse. In a second the pocketbook is open, billfold and change-purse extracted, and the pocketbook snapped shut again. And the thief has moved off. In a single morning, a hook can rifle as many as a hundred purses!

That particular morning, quite a few failed. But then, a pickpocket detective can't be stationed in every part of every department store at all times.

The ridiculous habit many women have, of carrying shoulder-strap purses, has been another boon to the hook. In a crowd, such a woman is helpless. Her purse, hanging away from her body, can be opened without the slightest degree of pressure. And even in an open street, she can be brushed and robbed while she is angrily glaring at what she believes to be some clumsy, rude masher.

If women make good victims, quite a few of them also make first class hooks and stalls. One of them, known professionally as Madame Lady Finger, was one of the most genteel-looking, exquisitely dressed "ladies about town." Seeing her stroll regally along New York's Broadway amid the after-theater crowd, no one would possibly suspect that under her ermine wrap, her fingers were busily at work. If she happened to bump a gentleman, he apologized profusely.

Make no mistake, though. Madame Lady Finger could well afford her gorgeous trappings. As a cannon, she was earning well over $50,000 a year—more than most of the victims she "contacted!"

To cope with this horde of city-fingered rats, almost every big city has organized a special pickpocket squad.

The members of these squads are selected, like the men they pursue, on the basis of alertness, quick-thinking, memory and most important of all, lack of distinguishing characteristics. Since no cannon in his right senses would think of operating under the eyes of the police, it is essential that the officers blend easily into the background. Tallness, shortness or stoutness alone can disqualify a candidate.

In the old days, detectives used to concentrate on memorizing the faces of known pickpockets. But today, that's no longer enough. There are just too many members of the "hook and stall" fraternity. Instead, the officer must become a specialist in the psychology of a cannon. By the time he is an experienced member of the squad, he knows to the fraction of an inch exactly where a hook's hands are going. He knows to the fraction of a second when the hook's hands will get there.

His proudest moment comes when his ability to fade into the background has become so perfect that the pickpocket selects him as a victim. The hook who makes that mistake won't be practicing his profession in public for very long. The State has a vacation resort runy and waiting to receive him.

WHAT CAN THE AVERAGE citizen do to protect himself against this form of thievery? Well, it isn't easy. A good cannon can practically steal the shirt off a man's back.

But by and large, a few sensible precautions will substantially reduce the odds for you to be a victim. With as much easy loot about, the cannon is not likely to tempt fate by going for a hard job.

"I have a full time—and I mean full time—repair business."

"It's the most fascinating business, repairing everything that uses electricity. I think the price of the NRI course is only a drop in the bucket to what it has been worth to me, and I'm sure others will say the same. The year I started in business, I remodeled a 30 x 24 building myself, at my home at the edge of town. I have a fine shop, a fine stock of tools, all types of parts and supplies. And I don't owe anyone a dime. Everything was bought and paid for as I earned the money, including a good vacation."

First of all, never flash a roll of bills—it's asking for trouble. Keep your money in your pocket, especially on payday. Take the cash to the bank or take it home—and keep everything there except what you need for actual expenses.

Second, never fill your wallet so full that it bulges. A fat protrusion from back pocket or breast pocket is a green light to a conman.

Third, if you must carry currency—and who doesn't—keep it in your breast pocket, inside your jacket. It's not that such a pocket is immune—rather, with so many easy picks from the outside available, the conman won't usually take the trouble.

Fourth, don't feel for your wallet in a crowd. Assuring yourself that your money is safe, by feeling, is merely a high sign to any book in the vicinity. Similarly, they just love those signs reading, "Beware of pickpockets." Seven out of every ten persons reading such a sign touch their wallets automatically.

Fifth, don't lose your temper if you're jostled, pushed or annoyed in a crowd. The chances are that a steal is setting you up. Keep your mind on your money. If, in the midst of a jostle you're also tapped from behind, watch out.

Sixth, if you're a woman, keep your pocketbook firmly in your hand, holding it by the clasp. Don't forget: never relax and never put your purse down out of sight.

Seventh, report all thefts to the police. Even a vague description of technique alone can more often than not lead to a recovery. The pickpocket squad operates with a proficiency that borders on magic.

Eighth, remember that you're never safe—anywhere. More than one pickpocket has been caught operating right inside a criminal courtroom, with the judge and bailiffs looking right at him. One of them even walked to jail smilingly—carrying the bailiff's wallet.

Some conmen will try anything!

THE TEMPLE TREASURE

settled down between two crumbling blocks of laterite. I had to think—to organize my wits and strength, and plan my future moves. But right now rest came first. I dozed off out of sheer exhaustion and slept until some instinct made me open my eyes. If you've ever been in the jungle you know how noisy it can be one moment and suddenly deathly still the next. That's what woke me up... the stillness... the absolute silence... not a sound except rustling leaves... even the breeze seemed to stop. My ears tried to pick out a sound, any sound. I heard a sharp crrassck! The movement was in a thicket about ten yards to my right. I dropped down onto my belly, swallowing the cry of pain that shot up from my leg. I caught a glimpse of something yellow in the moonlight, then heard the mannish low voice of Lydia calling, "Jerry!", "Mac?" My heart seemed to drop from it's newly assumed position in my throat back down to where it belonged. Sheer relief flooded through my body as I called the girls to my hiding place.

"We were looking all over for you", Carol chattered breathlessly. "We were scared stiff to come near this place till we found you", Lydia added. Then almost as an afterthought, but with apprehension when she saw my leg "Where's Jerry?" The details of the incident still whirled sickly through my brain but somehow I managed to say, "He's dead."

It started when I was flying junkets for the French Foreign Legion, as a soldier of fortune, ferrying supplies into the area of Dien Bien Phu. The surplus plane they gave me plowed up a thousand feet of prime Cambodian real estate when I got caught on the hot end of a patch of flak. It was shot to pieces and started burning but I was tossed through the cockpit before the damn thing blew and aside from getting cut up pretty badly all I got was a busted arm. French ground forces found me and I wasn't too worse for wear by the time I was finally wall carefully the gem would fall into a tube-like crevice that had been drilled in back of the eye setting. We lost about six rubies before getting a technique perfected for removing them safely. The work involved was tiring and tedious—but of course well worth the effort. At the end of the first day we had successfully removed twenty-seven rubies and lost about eleven to the crevice device. Three more days netted us an additional eighty rubies.

The sound of voices came echoing up to us from the corridors below. We stopped working, stared at each other and shrugged. Then Jerry and I went down to investigate while the girls stayed in the room. From a hidden vantage point we saw six men; three civilians and three men in uniform. The uniformed men were orientals, Viet Nameese soldiers, and I recognized one of the civilians as a man named Bouchard, an ex-legionnaire I had met when we had been buying supplies in Bangkok. They were looking around the place carefully and with drawn guns. They had to be looking for us. Bouchard... that bastard, he must have figured out why we were here.

I knew it was too good to be true, where the devil did we make our mistake. Then it came to me. We didn't make the mistake I did. It was back there in Bangkok. I had to buy a gun! Oh, we all bought guns, that was normal enough for any party going into the jungle. But I got fancy. I bought a surplus Browning Automatic Rifle. For those that know about firearms I don't have to mention the fact that BAR's are a most ideal game weapon—HUMAN game that is. The guy I bought it from, Bouchard—must have known that I wanted protection against something more dangerous than jungle animals and that I must have something worth protecting—for a drifting bum like him this little information was enough to set him drooling.

We got back to Lydia and Carol, packed up our equipment, loaded ourselves down with our jewels and decided to get out of the place. The men downstairs didn't seem the types who were interested in talking. They wanted what we had and none of us particularly cared to share. We quietly slipped back downstairs. When we saw the gallery ahead leading to the entrance (the only way in or out) was unobstructed, we barreled down it. They were more startled by our running charge than we were at seeing them appear suddenly in our path. I didn't wait to find out how friendly they were . . . or weren't. The BAR in my hands started rattling, it's tale of death and two men directly in our way were cut down easily. The girls were running a hell of a lot faster than I ever thought girls could run and Jerry was pump-disregarded the order and got under way the day we received it. There was no problem in slipping over the border which was situated well into the jungle.

On the 28th we got our first glimpses of the Ankor Vat's five spires rising above the trees. Four hours of hacking through the dense foliage surrounding the area had brought us to the most which encircles the temple. We followed the most till we reached the causeway which leads to the entrance of the shrine. From what I remembered the place wasn't as huge as it now appeared. But then we were approaching it from a different direction from the normal tourist route. We entered the holy place which was beginning to really feel the deterioration that age had imposed upon it. The walls and statuary were crumbling. The forest had already spread it's tropical greenery into and around every crack in the construction, and animals had made it their home.

The only way we could possibly find anything in the debris would be by means of a slow and methodical inch by inch search of the entire area. In the main tower stood a miniature shrine to Vishnu, it was over 200 feet high and could only be reached by climbing thirty-eight, two foot high steps. The staircase seemed the logical place to start our search; we were wrong, we waited three days finding out. We chipped, dug and scraped for sixteen more days, our supplies were getting low. On the twentieth day we entered one of the third story rooms in the North Tower, the walls were literally covered with carvings of animals and gods of every shape and description. We started our, by now, habitual ritual of chipping and scraping. This time we didn't have to work long.

I had sent my chisel biting into the eye of a sculpted monkey and when the sandstone eye chipped away the monkey suddenly had a new eye. The new eye wasn't the ugly yellow-gray of the stone though, this one was red, blood red. RUBY red. I screamed out something (I still don't know what) and quickly chiseled at the other eye. By now Jerry, Lydia and Carol were right behind me and they were staring open mouthed as the second ruby eye was uncovered . . . we went wild!

SOUNDS LIKE a fairy tale, doesn't it? Well up until that moment everything had happened as if it were all in a beautiful dream. But dreams have a habit of turning into nightmares and ours changed fast.

The first hitch came in removing the rubies from the carvings after we had found them. The rubies were all large, the smallest was approximately fifty karats, but they were set in the stone in such a way that if you didn't pick it out of the wall carefully the gem would fall into a tube-like crevice that had been drilled in back of the eye setting. We lost about six rubies before getting a technique perfected for removing them safely. The work involved was tiring and tedious—but of course well worth the effort. At the end of the first day we had successfully removed twenty-seven rubies and lost about eleven to the crevice device. Three more days netted us an additional eighty rubies.

The sound of voices came echoing up to us from the corridors below. We stopped working, stared at each other and shrugged. Then Jerry and I went down to investigate while the girls stayed in the room. From a hidden vantage point we saw six men; three civilians and three men in uniform. The uniformed men were orientals, Viet Namese soldiers, and I recognized one of the civilians as a man named Bouchard, an ex-legionnaire I had met when we had been buying supplies in Bangkok. They were looking around the place carefully and with drawn guns. They had to be looking for us Bouchard . . . that bastard, he must have figured out why we were here.

I knew it was too good to be true.

where the devil did we make our mistake. Then it came to me. We didn't make the mistake I did. It was back there in Bangkok I had to buy a gun! Oh, we all bought guns, that was normal enough for any party going into the jungle. But I got fancy. I bought a surplus Browning Automatic Rifle. For those that know about firearms I don't have to mention the fact that BAR's are a most ideal game weapon—HUMAN game that is. The BAR in my hands started rattling, it's tale of death and two men directly in our way were cut down easily. The girls were running a hell of a lot faster than I ever thought girls could run and Jerry was pumping slugs from his .48, over his shoulder, covering our escape. One of his shots clipped a guy in the side and before he could even scream I chewed him up the rest of the way with the Browning. I dropped back firing like a maniac so that the girls and Jerry could make it to the forest. Then after a final wild burst of fire, I followed them. We were lucky; we got out unscathed. Even more lucky was the fact that we got out alone, nobody followed us. They must have thought we weren't going to stop running till we got to America. They were wrong, dead wrong.

I wasn't going to lose a fortune just because the going got rough. And if I knew Jerry Randall, he damn well wasn't either. Lydia put up a terrible squawk about Jerry daring to go back in there and to my very pleasant surprise Carol tried to talk me out of going alone. Of course their talk was wasted but it's awfully nice to know somebody cares whether you live or not. Also I hate greedy women, it was nice to also note that among her other qualifications, that Carol wasn't greedy. For a few days we'd lay off. The place was big enough to hide our secret room easily amidst the hundred or so identical ones. Without seeing the eyelid carvings they'd still be in the dark as to where the rubies were. If our friends weren't out by then we'd get them out.

IN THE MEANTIME I was getting more and more friendly with Lydia's sister Carol. Up to now she had been on a strictly money hunting expedition but between our new found riches and the dark nights of waiting; well the jungle does things to a woman. It must have been just as bad on her with Lydia and Jerry carrying on every night as it was on me. My nails already were chewed down and if she hadn't gotten cozy pretty quickly I would probably have started climbing trees.

After four days of sexual (if not mental) tranquility, Jerry decided it was time for us to reclaim our stake.

We slipped back to the temple and quietly entered one of the side portals. Splitting up we edged our separate ways up the ramps leading to the second level. The sound of metal chipping against stone on this level told us that Bouchard hadn't yet gotten to the treasure but was looking, in vain, through one of the minor excavations we had made before finding the rubies. I looked carefully around the door to the room; motioned to Jerry to cover me as I charged in; he did and I did. The two men were stricken with horror as I wheeled around the partition, my automatic blazing fire. They tried to get across the room to their guns but by the time they were halfway there, their life was already spilling out onto the floor. Now we were in trouble, only two men were in this room that meant there was at least two, maybe more, left—and now they knew we were here.

"Let's get downstairs where we'll have better cover," Jerry said. He made a move to leave the room and two shots chunked into the wall, splintering stone at eye level. Trapped, the only way out was the door and they had that pinpoint. The shots had come from above us and to the right. The nearest ramp was about ten feet past the door and to the left. We had a chance—if one of us could dive out the door and roll part way down the ramp. He could cover the others escape. I figured the odds and they were pretty much in my favor; it's pretty hard to hit a moving target from an angle of almost 80 degrees, especially if you don't know when the target's going to pop into view.

I made up my mind and moved. It seemed like an hour as I flew out the door and lunged down the incline. Bullets came at me like hailstones, digging up my route. As soon as I recovered from the initial shock of hitting the hard stone floor I started returning fire up at our attackers. Meanwhile Jerry slipped out of the room and tried to get up and behind them. As far as I could see there were only two of them, Bouchard and one of the little uniformed monkeys. Jerry was coming up on their right side so instead of the single shots I switched to automatic bursts in an effort to keep their attention strictly on me. I chopped up the area around them neatly but my preoccupation caused me to take my eyes off of Jerry.

As he was approaching the two huddled men a third, with a sword, stepped out of an alcove behind Jerry and swung the lethal blade at his neck... I fired, but too late... Jerry's head was severed before his assailant felt the burst that tore him up. I think I threw up.

We had ourselves a standoff for a good two hours before Bouchard's buddy got reckless while they were both trying to out maneuver me. He came at me from my left. He stayed there... permanently, with a bullet hole through the bridge of his nose and the back of his head plastered to the wall behind him. Meanwhile Bouchard wasn't playing hopscotch. He sent a slug through my knee that knocked me all the way down the incline. At that point I'd just about had it and limped out of there as fast as possible while I was still out of his sight. My leg was numb, but wasn't bleeding much. The pain didn't start until I was already in the jungle.

The girls found me at Ankor Thom, I was a mess but we managed to get back to our boat.

My leg stayed in Bangkok. So did Lydia. No amount of coaxing could get her to leave. Carol and I promised to send her money when we had sold some of the rubies (over $70,000 total value). It was a wasted offer. A week after we arrived in San Francisco, Carol read the letter from the Thai government explaining the suicide death of one Lydia Randall in the hotel suite of one Eric Bouchard. Bouchard was also found in the suite; naked with his throat slit.

The letter also mentioned the fact that we of course could not return to Thailand under penalty of imprisonment. That last part didn't bother me much. I wasn't going far on one leg anyway and even if I was going somewhere it couldn't be Ankor Vat. That part I found out from our government. The three uniformed monkeys as I called them were North Viet Namese soldiers and had gone along with Bouchard with orders to take the rubies back to the communist government, if the rubies actually existed.

The rubies do exist and the Viet's are probably waiting for me to come and get them. Well they're going to have a long wait. Carol and I are pretty comfortable. The money from the rubies have me set up nicely in business and that's enough for me. I'm lucky to be alive.

In all the years that we've been back from that horrible place, she hasn't uttered one word. The psychiatrist at the sanitarium has a word for her condition, but his explanation is unnecessary. And then he adds, "Fortunately. . . becoming increasingly the standard of American woman."

She is, in other words, becoming harder to please because she herself is better educated about sex than American women used to be, and much more so than the men in her life. If she had remained ignorant of sex and its refinements, she might not be so dissatisfied with her American husband or lover. She reads marriage manuals and "sex-texts," and as she improves her own knowledge she gets more and more fed up with his inertia. He remains a crude bungler because he hasn't the patience or the cultural curiosity to refine his sex techniques or improve his boudoir manners.

technique are often voiced by spouses who take sexual response. . . . No one will ever know the vast number of females who are live corpses in sexual union or who throughout their married lives pretend to feel something they have never experienced." He too has an implicit condemnation of the male who's too selfish and impetuous in his love-making, or downright lazy in educating himself, when he writes: "Cetial control is a knack that has to be acquired or else sexual action cannot progress satisfactorily."

In my work as a marriage counselor or I am repeatedly appalled by the complete disregard American males have for making themselves attractive or learning anything at all about the art of love. They seem to believe they're born with enough charm, finesse, and sex appeal to please any woman, and think it's a waste of energy to improve whatever natural gifts they may have in that regard. While women constantly strive to enhance their natural appeal with cosmetics, fragrant perfumes, meticulous feminine hygiene, and altering clothes, the males adopt a "Take-me-as-I-am" attitude. During courtship and throughout any marriage that's a success, the average American woman constantly strives to put her best foot forward, spending all the time and money she can afford to improve what nature gave her, in order to attract and hold her man. She gives everything she's got to try to be appealing.

Our average male, on the other hand, has a negative approach in his relations with women. He wouldn't dream of emulating the suave, courteous, considerate, and sophisticated manners of the foreigner during courtship because he figures that such etiquette is "phony." He can be phony in anything also—pretending to be virile, clever with gag, he's borrowed, adventuresome, or generous—but he won't waste the energy required to be gracious, charming or unselfish. Rather than improve himself as a lover, he'll try to improve a situation. That's why the standard courtship technique of the American male is fleecing his money, buying a girl drinks in hopes of breaking down her resistance, taking her to places he can't afford to go in order to impress her, and then making her around to exact repayment for the evening's entertainment.

THIS tough-and-ready, or care-free man tactics which our males reckon are real manly, are a definite pain in the neck to women. They go along with the technique because they know that it's the best they can expect in this country, realizing the men are too lazy and phony to act otherwise. And as they pretend to applaud and admire these men who are too indolent to become skillful lovers, simply because they are, for the average woman, all that's available. After marriage, thwarted by the ham-handed bungling of their husbands' efforts at love-making, they become the "live corpses" Dr. Kinsey referred to.

It wouldn't take much to alter this situation which is wrecking marriages all over the country. Just a little consideration and an energetic effort to improve their etiquette and sex education would reap for our men a harvest of swooning, desirous women instead of a flock of frustrated females.

FOR EASY SEX

Jimmy—staunchly declined offers of bed, but when his stomach backfired and he literally fainted from malnutrition, he awoke in his motel room surrounded by a number of dining women.

First plying the kid with food, then with booze, the conversation gravitated. Ongoing like sixteen-year-olds, a couple of dowagers offered Jimmy "health and welfare money" if he'd scrap his principles and "be kind to me." A blousy brunette won Jimmy's attentions after turning over $800. For Jimmy's "health and welfare."

Along the line, Jimmy parlayed this to $800 and someone, doubtless one of the lovers, reported the whole sordid business to the New Orleans police.

"Prostitution," was a magistrate's verdict. However, the kid had no record and explained the circumstances under which he'd labored. "This stinks to high heaven, and I'd put you in the can—all of you, but I don't want to dignify this stupid morality further."

All types, class and sexual appeal, then ride the interstate lines, and a few are normal gals looking for company.

There's no denying that a guy can get on a bus, meet a nice girl and shape himself the romance of a lifetime. Buses are generally stocked with an abundance of vacationing secretaries, salesgirls and college girls who, while short on cash, most of them, have the standard endowment in the physical department.

"I guess I know just about every justice-of-the-peace and marriage regulation on the West Coast," Vern told us recently. "In twenty years of driving the highways, I've played Cupid to plenty!"

The type if woman that gets on Vern's nerves is typified in the fortune, any divorcee who flashes a bankroll and buys her attention. And there are many of them. "Repeaters," Vern calls them.

"Mrs. T.—" Vern indicated a swivel-tipped graying brunette, "is practically a stockholder on the line. Whenever she gets bored she takes a ride and invariably comes up with a new guy. Oversexed dames don't give a rap about the competition," Vern concluded. "They're big tipplers and they buy themselves seats beside the best looking men..."

FANTASTIC? To be sure, but nonetheless true. At a St. Augustine motel not long ago, a vacationing newspaper reporter, Paul —, of New York, "put in one of the wildest nightmares of my career" researching the conduct of women passengers on an East coast bus.

"Making love on a bus cramps my style," Paul grins. "So I told them we've got a few days in Florida—let's make the most of it. I never thought those dames would take me seriously!"

ONE of eight men among forty women, Paul's room was centrally located in the far end of a court—centrally, that is, to the constant parade of nightcrawlers who besieged his quarters. A man of normal capacity, Paul ran out of gas after two nights. The majority of his callers, in their thirties to fifties, were teachers and secretaries on their first Florida vacation. And all of them disillusioned.

There's little subtlety and no finesse to women who, finding themselves in an appalling majority for the duration of a tour, are determined to have a good time come hell or high water. In Paul's case, a "determined" blonde was in his room when he returned from the trip to the desk, following his complaint of a stolen key.

It may be flattering for a guy to find himself in a haven, and doubtless it's fun. But after a while the laughs wear thin and a lot of animalistic, pathetic dames become a colossal nuisance. And downright exhausting. So it is on the bualine best.

Aside from the moral degradation and the overall lack of morality, the canned tours down the highways and byways of the nation scarcely live up to the brochures. You may, as the man said, "see more and the driver 'sees' nothing," but by the time it's all over you'll be ready for a real vacation. In a real home, probably. ■

20 years to life each, and he had only received five years in a slave labor camp, with the possibility of parole for good behavior. He naturally tried to get as many good marks as possible at the Nizhny Tagilsk camp by collaborating with the "Osoby Upolnomotsheny"—the Special Investigator of Soviet Secret Police sent to our camp to find out why hoodlums regarded it as a rest and recreation center, while political, intellectual and unorganized convicts starved to death. The Upolnomotsheny had planted him in our barracks, one of the gangsters had recognized him and now the Zakon was meeting to mete out terrible punishment.

The man's eyes were pools of sheer terror, mingled with wild insanity. "Let me go, Bratsky, my little brothers. I have a wife and children. I'll pay you. I have a million rubles stashed away in a Dacha near Moscow. Let me go, I have a wife and children..."

"This guy is getting repetitious," Zhenya Baistruk snarled, "gimme a blade!" The curved home-made Finka dagger glistened briefly in candlelight. We had stolen lubricating oil from the camp's garage, filled perforated cans with sand, inserted a crude wick, saturated it with the oil and had a source of light in the barracks, which burned with a black acrid smoke and added to the gloom of the nocturnal session.

"No, no, no!" the doomed man shrieked. "Not in the guts! Kill me mercifully, make me die fast. Ooooooh!"

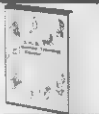

Baistruk licked his lips greedily. His nostrils flared up and his snake-like eyes burned with sadistic glee as he plunged the dagger's sharp point into the stoole's abdomen, making two sharp incisions right and left. One of the hoodlums produced a caged rat, trapped in a four-gallon oil can. Baistruk grasped the struggling rodent by its neck, forcing it into the gaping wound in the prisoner's stomach. The empty can was then placed over the rat and held firmly by two gangsters, so that the animal had no choice but go on gnawing at the dying man's intestines.

It took the stoole two hours to die, and when his body stiffened in final convulsion, Baistruk retrieved the rat, tied it with a stout rope around the corpse's neck and kicked open the barracks door. We heaved the stiff out into the snow, and went back to sleep. A rat deserved a rat's death, and the example we had set would make any potential informer think twice before selling out fellow convicts for preferential treatment.

Excited by the torture session and pleasure of killing a human being, Zhenya and Vasya rolled dice for

The Key to a Successful Business

THOUSANDS OF PEOPLE would like to get into a small business of their own and build it up, but they're confronted with two problems: how to raise the capital they need in order to get started and how to eliminate risks. They know that a high percentage of small independent firms fail because they don't know where the pitfalls are or how to avoid them. Business consultant Arthur Lieber has written a book called The Master Plan which resolves these problems in language anyone can understand. You'll use it yourself and sell it in large numbers. raw sex. Zhenya lost and he was obliged to ask the winner if he preferred his sexual partner to be male or female.

"Today I prefer a boy," Vasya rubbed his groin, "get me Grisha Lizukov..."

Most hardened criminals in the camp were bisexual, and could make love to men, and women without batting an eyelid. They had nothing but contempt for pederasty (malequeers) and Zhopniki (homosexual transvestites) whom they abused and tortured for fun. They themselves were above such emotions as love and desire. They merely felt animal lust, and could quench it with man, woman or animal. I have seen them making love to sheep and donkeys, before raping a woman, just to prove they regarded both on the same level.

GRISHA LIZUKOV was an apple-cheeked boy of 18, sentenced to seven years of hard labor for attending a Baptist revival meeting with his grandfather, and boasting about it at school. He was brutally abused by hoodlums the first night in camp, and slowly earned the title of "Polevoi Zhopnik"—field-duty homosexual.

Zhenya Baistrak sought out Grisha, dragged him down from his bunk and forced him to strip naked and enter the bunk where Vasya was waiting. The toothless hoodlum grunted with pleasure as his heavy hands reached out to grab the frightened boy's neck and then proceeded to commit unspeakable depravities.

At 5:15 a.m. the shrill whistles of Nadziratel guards sounded the reveille. All of us fell in for morning parade, to be counted and accounted for. Grisha Lizukov limped and had to be supported by two men. The stoolie's corpse, with the frozen rat still tied around the neck, was carried to the perimeter fence and stacked together with the bodies of other prisoners who had died, or were murdered, during the long winter night. Labor gangs marched out to the dam construction site after a breakfast of Balanda barley soup and a chunk of potato-and-sawdust bread.

Although we were supposed to be working too, we did not budge. By unspoken agreement with the camp's administration, the elite Urki and Blatnoi gangs of Russian underworld were not forced to work in the camps. In this respect, all Soviet prisons and stockades are pretty much the same. The political and intellectual prisoners, the black market speculators, hit-and-run drivers, draft dodgers, homosexuals and unorganized thieves are worked to death on starvation rations by the authorities, and terrorized by the organized underworld mobs which rule the barracks with an iron hand.

The camp commandants and prison wardens prefer to deal with a few hardened criminals, capable of maintaining order and enforcing discipline, rather than risk riots, mutinies and mass jailbreaks.

They are not supposed to give preferential treatment to mobsters, but they know from experience that trying to get the hoodlums to work is asking for trouble, arson, sabotage and wholesale bloodshed. Members of elite gangs are therefore registered as "specialists," "consultants" or "medical personnel" and not required to do any kind of physical work.

We returned to the barracks to play cards, roll dice and wait for the unofficial "second breakfast" the camp's cooks were obliged to present us with, if they wanted to survive. It came at noon, when the kitchen gang brought up buckets with boiled potatoes, fish soup, cabbage, bread and tea. We ate as much as we could without splitting the gut and the kitchen attendants who waited patiently took the rest back to the kitchen, to be served to the working convicts. No wonder they complained their rations were getting smaller every day. Apart from what we consumed, the kitchen staff stole a lot, for themselves and for the prostitutes from women's barracks who entertained them at night.

We had no cash money in the camp, but signed IOUs to cover gambling losses. Apart from regular stakes, which sometimes were as high as $1,400 per session, we could wager bets on sex. The loser had to ask the winner whether he preferred a boy or a girl, and deliver the unwilling sexual partner at once—or face punishment by Zakon tribunal. Getting hold of homosexuals in the barracks was not too difficult. But when the winner asked for a woman, the loser had to cut through the wire fence separating our stockade from the women's barracks, and bring one of the prostitutes back with him. This usually posed no special difficulties, since the sex-starved man-hungry women were happy to oblige. Threatening them with a knife and promising food and blankets helped too.

It was worse when the winner demanded a lesbian woman in lieu of payment. The femmes and the butches had a crush on each other, but despised men. To make them follow a hoodlum to men's barracks required great skill, physical force and powers of persuasion. But the criminals regarded it as a special honor to make love to a lesbian until she moaned, groaned and admitted that men are better than other women.

It was inconceivable that gambling losses remained unhonored. His own pals would kill the hood-lum who tried to wiah on payment. Ten or twenty years could pass after an IOU was signed, but if two gangsters met each other after doing time in labor camp and one produced an IOU signed by the other, the loser had no choice but commit armed robbery or murder to pay his debts within 24 hours, or be killed by the mob.

But all this—sex, gambling and occasional murder—was routine. Our Number One problem was boredom. We would discuss escape for hours, but knew it was just hot air and no amount of talk could change our situation. Sure, it was easy to cut through the outer perimeter fence and break out of camp. But what then?

The nearest city was 320 miles away, and while we could reach it on foot in a fortnight, only one road connected our camp with the outside world. This road would be blocked by police and auxiliary militia units at 15-mile intervals the moment a prisoner escaped, and the fleeing convict would be recaptured sooner or later, before he got to the city.

Striking out across the Tundra swamps and Taiga forests to bypass the road and inhabited points had been tried by several convicts in the past. They were either devoured by bears and wolves, or drowned in quicksand bogs and bottomless marshes. Escape was possible only by the identity-switch method. A mobster doing 20 years to life, who had no chance to benefit from amnesty, pardon or parole, would search for a convict whose age, height and physical features resembled his, and who was about to be discharged in a few weeks. He would stalk the intended victim, kill him and batter his face past all recognition before dragging the still-warm corpse to his own barracks. Cooperation of prisoners who worked in the camp administration office was needed to switch fingerprint index cards. And the convicts who could identify the mobster were silenced by threats of Zakon trials and terrible punishment.

THE MURDERED convict would be buried under the lifer's name, and the lifer released with the dead man's "clean papers." It could not be engineered too often, for obvious reasons, and required a great deal of planning and preparation. Even so, the authorities were aware that prisoners were murdered in the camp for no other reason than they looked like one of the lifers or long-term hoodlums.

It was standard procedure, therefore, in all Soviet prison stockades, to transfer short-term prisoners at irregular intervals to IFLOR (light labor camps) stockades, where no hoodlums resided. No convict was ever informed in advance of his release date, premature discharge for good behavior or parole. This would have meant sentencing him to death. Prisoners about to be released were called out of the ranks during the morning parade, ordered to report on the double to the guard room, and locked up there until their discharge papers were made out and signed by the commandant. They never set foot back in camp—not only for their own protection, but to prevent smuggling of messages and possible organization of jailbreaks from the outside.

One day, in June 1965, a hoodlum named Misha Menchikov learned from the grapevine that a weasel-faced pickpocket from Barracks Seven, Vitya Korolov, was about to be transferred to an ITLOR stockade. This could mean one thing only—premature discharge by administrative order. Korolov did not look like Menchikov, but Misha, who was doing 12 years for gouging out the eyes of a Moscow prostitute and carving up a copy who tried to help her, was eager to get out. His pals on the outside sent word the mob had bribed officers of the Moscow Vice Squad, to let them run the prostitution racket in hotels and night-clubs frequented by foreign tourists, in return for substantial kickbacks in dollars and drugs. Misha Menchikov was needed as an organizer, since he was an expert in seducing 14-year-old school girls and then turning them into prostitutes.

He stalked Korolov for a few days, trying to kill him in a way that would make identification impossible. His pals at the administration office promised to switch the fingerprint index cards and physical description sheets during the absence of the Deputy Commandant who knew Menchikov well, and who would have immediately spotted the identity-switch trick. But a Monet-chik (currency speculator) named Zhorka Krivoy, who had befriended Korolov, got wind of the scheme and warned his pal. The pickpocket made a bee-line for the guard room and complained to Captain Simonov, the Deputy Commandant. The pickpocket was put aboard a supply truck, and sent with an escort of two armed men to the light-labor stockade where he would be safe.

Because of Krivoy's noble act (and it was really noble for a convict to risk his life to save a pal), secret police operatives summoned up by the Uplonomotsheny, went through administration records, discovered the identity switch intended by Menchikov, and sent all the clerks to work in the Kolyma gold mines across the Bering Strait from Alaska.

poor country, and perhaps twice as much in the United States. She then asked me to figure out what $18,000 could buy. I made her a list which included a Cadillac, a fiberglass motor boat, water skis, 82 dresses, 30 coats, 112 pairs of shoes, 964 assorted pieces of lingerie, 44 handbags, 108 pairs of gloves and enough cosmetics to last a brigade of women for 12 months. She had studied the list and then asked me to make some changes, which included a T-38 instead of a Cadillac, a cottage in the French Alps instead of the water ski boat, and 29 Dior dresses instead of the 82 regular ones. I thought she had gone off her nut when she begged me to help her escape from the Soviet Union, so both of us could marry abroad and live happily ever after.

We could have married in Moscow and applied for an exit permit. But her parents would never let her go. To have his daughter migrate to the West would ruin her father's Communist Party career. And the authorities placed so many obstacles in the way of marriage between Soviet girls and Westerners, that some brides had to wait up to a dozen years before their applications for exit permits were cleared. Katya knew all this, of course. When she had explained it to me, I had no recourse but to help her escape.

IN JULY, 1964, I took advantage of my summer vacation and took Katya for a sightseeing trip to Odessa, a bustling Russian port on the Black Sea. There I contacted the third mate of a rusty Greek freighter anchored in the port, and bribed him to hide Katya in the paint locker aft. As a foreigner I could leave Odessa legally. I had arranged to meet Katya in Istanbul. She had stolen her mother's diamond ring and about $2,000 worth of Russian rubles which we used to pay the Greek officer.

We planned to smuggle Katya aboard the freighter in the evening, just hours before the ship was due to sail. On the night of July 11, 1964, we went down to the Pioneer Yacht Club on Moldavanka Beach, broke into the bondhouse, stole a rowboat and rowed slowly across the bay towards the harbor's entrance. The sea was calm, and if anyone saw us we were just a young couple having a good time by moonlight. To evade the sentries posted on watchtowers at the harbor's mouth, we waited until a big cargo liner glided into port. We followed in its wake, sticking close to its hull, getting soaked as the propellers churned up the water, and wet from the spray. But we had almost made it to the Greek freighter's port bow, where a rope ladder had already been lowered for Katya, when a powerful light blinded us suddenly. "Stoi! Ruki Perki, Yob Vashu Pidu Mag!" a voice called out. I rowed furiously towards the shore. Shots rang out from the patrol boat. Katya stood up to leap onto the pier.

She suddenly crumpled and fell into the water, blood spurting from a wound in her neck. I dived after her, and almost drowned before the Russian security guards fished me out of the drink. Katya was dead by that time. Despite my genuine grief, shock and fear, I did not lose my mind. Helping a Soviet citizen escape from Russia was a capital offense, punishable by death in case of Russians, and life imprisonment for foreigners. I had no intention of doing life in a Soviet camp, and maintained at first that all we wanted was to find a quiet place for some passionate lovemaking. This did not ring true, of course, since we could have done it on the beach, rather than enter a busy and guarded harbor. I was ordered to strip naked and was then searched in the interrogation room of police headquarters. They found the money and the diamond ring on me. I "confessed" then that both Katya and I were hooked on narcotics, and were hoping to buy drugs from crews of foreign ships in Odessa. The cops started beating me, throwing me on the floor and kicking me in the ribs and stepping on my crotch with their heavy hobnailed Sapozhki boots. It hurt, but I knew that a life sentence would hurt more, so I stuck to my story. In the end, after beating me all night, they accepted it as true, and ordered me to sign a full confession.

As a "Morfineist" (drug addict) and "Kontrabandist" (drug smuggler), I could be sentenced to five years on the first charge and fifteen years on the second. In court, I maintained that I was no "Kontrabandist" because it was my first foray to the Odessa port and my first abortive attempt to buy drugs directly from suppliers. Till then I had bought them from pushers in Moscow parks.

Because I had signed the confession, and because Katya's parents had pulled strings to hush up their daughter's killing by security guards, Judge Ivan G. Boyarov of the Odessa People's Court sentenced me to five years in a hard-labor camp on the "Morfineist" charge and dismissed the "Kontrabandist" charge.

I LEARNED the ropes fast in Odessa's Transit Prison. The hoodlums ruled everywhere, and the pickpockets, speculators, small-fry criminals and political prisoners were terrorized day and night. To survive five years of Soviet captivity, I had to join an organized mob. But how?

The opportunity presented itself in the Vologda Peresylka (Prison Depot) in Northern Russia, where all convicts sentenced to hard labor are held until extra working hands are requested by some construction site, coal mine or lumber camp.

I LOOKED like a young, handsome and innocent boy, and the depraved homosexuals among the convicts desired me as their playmate. I was tossed into a barracks with eighty other prisoners, and tried to get some sleep on a lice-infested bunk, when rough hands grabbed my private parts and started kneading them furiously. I jumped up to look into the sadistic face of a burly criminal, whose eyes shone with perverted desire. Three of his pals waited on line.

"Lozhis. davai zhopu, viyebu tebya!" The gangster ordered me to lie face down and let him caress me as much as he wanted.

I guess I went berserk then. Katya's death, my trial, sufferings in transit prisons, indignities, the thought of my parents and vulned career—all now erupted in murderous intensity. I leaped at the hoodlum, striking him in the nose with a vicious skate chop. He was dying by the time he hit the floor. His three pals ganged up on me. One whipped out a home-made knife, the other two held Shillo bayonets in their hands. I fought like a madman, tearing down the bunk and lashing out with a nail-studded plank to catch one of the hoods over his face. He screamed as the rusty nails bit into his eyes. The other two worked me over with the bayonets. I still managed to kick one in the groin, but then I passed out and came to in the prison hospital, with a male nurse tending to my wounds.

I learned from him that the fight was watched by a hardened Moscow mobster named Sasha Zhulik, leader of the Moskovskiy Urki gang, who was doing 15 years for armed robbery. He liked the way I fought, and since he despised the queens who did not belong to his mob, he waded in and stopped the fight before they could avenge me to death. His authority was so great that one word from him was enough to send perversescurrying for cover. After recovery, I became Sasha's personal aide and bodyguard, teaching him various karate tricks, which were till then unknown in Russia.

We were transferred together to the Nizhny Tagilsk labor camp, where Sasha had died in a drunken brawl with prison guards. We had stolen medical alcohol from the infirmary, added tobacco juice for greater kick and almost wrecked the camp in the orgy which followed. When the guards had attempted to restore order, Sasha had attacked them in drunken fury. He had been mowed down by two automatic rifles. Mitya Bondarenko became the top mobster in our barracks and I transferred my alleged loyalty to him. In May 1968, Mitya received word from the outside that the mob would try to spring him and three of his pals in about a month. The mob planned to steal a Soviet military truck, uniforms and weapons. False documents would be available for six men. Two gangsters would drive the stolen truck to within ten miles of the camp and wait for Mitya and his pals to come over the wire and down the road. The escape would not be noticed until the next morning's parade, and by then the stolen truck would be far away.

Mitya chose me to accompany him on the escape bid. Refusal on my part would have been tantamount to death. But if I joined the jailbreak, I was doomed to remain in Russia forever. I could not go legit and ask the authorities for an exit permit.

without admitting my part in the escape and getting another 10-year sentence. Nor could I leave the Moscow mob without being classified as a traitor and then hunted down by Zakon killers. And if I tried to beg off, Mitya would kill me as a security risk, capable of betraying his escape plan. I was getting desperate enough to betray the whole mob to the camp commandant.

But unknown to me, my parents, aided by the Greek-Orthodox Patriarchate in the Holy Land, had made unceasing efforts on my behalf. To show how merciful and generous they were, and to court favor with the Greeks, the Soviets decided to release me from the labor camp and expel me from Russia. On June 2, 1966, my name was suddenly called out during the morning parade.

"Greks, yob tvayu duahu mas! Davai begom do wachty, pidsya yebanya!" the sergeant-major called out. Flanked by two guards, I double-timed across the parade ground to the guard house, not daring to look backwards, where my erstwhile pals stood in the ranks their faces contorted with rage. From that moment on, I was a marked man.

In the guard house, Camp Commandant Major Lomonosov shook my hand, informed me of my release, and said I could ride on the supply truck to Sverdlovsk, where police officials would escort me to Moscow and put me aboard the first West-bound plane.

IT TOOK about an hour for my documents to be processed, signed and countersigned, and each minute seemed like eternity. The Upolnomoshchenny of the secret police then called me to his office and asked whether I had any statements to make. I shook my head. "No, nothing."

"Wise guy, eh?" he snarled. "I could let you walk back to the barracks now, to have your brains squeezed out or your guts gnawed by a rat. You think I don't know what's going on, you jerk? I could leak word that you cooperated with us, and postpone your release by just one day. I have the authority to do so. You still have no state ment to make?"

"No, nothing . . ." I repeated. He got up from his chair and kicked me in the groin. I doubled up with pain and vomited all over the floor. He continued kicking me, until I screamed. Major Lomonosov came in and chewed the investigator out for beating up a foreigner.

The Upolnomoshchenny let go of me. "Von, svodka, yebut kurvu zhopu mas! Pashol!" I dragged myself out in the corridor. Junior Sergeant Gorshenko and Corporal Stoibunov tossed me into the supply truck, took my release documents from the front office and drove off towards the transit center for released prisoners in Sverdlovsk, a big industrial city in the Ural.

I was processed there, photographed, fingerprinted once again, bathed, shaved and barbed. I received shoes, socks, underwear, shirt, trousers and coat—all second-hand but in good condition, and 100 rubles ($110) in cash money, as my wages for hard labor—which I hadn't done. In fact, I hadn't worked one single day in the camp.

The "Arestantski Wagon"—special coach with barred windows for released prisoners—was coupled on to the Sverdlovsk-Moscow train. There were 62 of us, including 17 women, and we took turns making love to them during the 4-day journey. The two guards watched us tolerantly, having been paid to the tune of 10 rubles for each lovemaking session. By the time the train rolled into Moscow's Yaroslavl Vokzal, the guards had collected over $5,000 in cash, and the prostitutes were tired but happy.

I was driven in a Black Raven prison van to the Lefortovo Penitentiary on Moscow's outskirts where two tacturn officers asked me to sign papers saying I had been treated well and had no complaints. After this, I was driven in a Volga sedan to Sheremetyevo Airport, there, put aboard a KLM jetliner bound for Amsterdam.

As the plane took off with a roar and circled low over the forests of Podmoskovye, while gaining height for the westward hop, I looked through the window at the ancient spires of the Kremlin, tipped with ruby-red five-pointed stars, and thought of the mobsters, raging with impotence in the Nizhny Taglask camp. I had not betrayed them to the Soviets, but I will never be able to enter Russia again. Not only because the Soviets will activate the rest of my suspended sentence, but because these vicious Moscow Mobsters will kill me on sight. I was one of them and now I am free—really free—and they could never forgive me that. In a way, they are as much prisoners of their wolfish habits when they're outside the camps, as they are when they're behind bars. I honestly think that many of them really enjoyed being in jail, intimidating other prisoners, raping boys and women, amusing themselves with brutal torture sessions, gambling, eating and sleeping as much as they wanted and never doing a day's work. It was these men and their uncontested power that constituted the real tragedy of the Soviet prison camp.

Don Bolander says: "Now you can learn to speak and write like a college graduate."

Is Your English Holding You Back?

"Do you avoid the use of certain words even though you know perfectly well what they mean? Have you ever been embarrassed because you pronounced a word incorrectly? Are you sometimes unsure of yourself in a conversation with new acquaintances? Do you have difficulty writing a good letter or putting your true thoughts down on paper?"

"If so, then you're a victim of crippled English," says Don Bolander, Director of Career Institute. "Crippled English is a handicap suffered by countless numbers of intelligent, adult men and women. Quite often they are held back in their jobs and their social lives because of their English. And yet, for one reason or another, it is impossible for these people to go back to school."

In these any way, without going back to school, to overcome this handicap? Don Bolander says, "Yes!" With degrees from the University of Chicago and Northwestern University, Bolander is an authority on adult education. For almost twenty years he has helped thousands of men and women stop making mistakes in English, increase their vocabularies, improve their writing, and become interesting conversationalists right in their own homes.

BOLANDER TELLS HOW IT CAN BE DONE

During a recent interview, Bolander said, "You don't have to go back to school in order to speak and write like a college graduate. You can gain the ability quickly and easily in the privacy of your own home through the Career Institute Method." In his answers to the following questions, Bolander tells how it can be done.

Question: What is so important about a person's ability to speak and write?

Answer: People judge you by the way you speak and write. Poor English weakens your self-confidence—handicaps you in your dealings with other people. Good English is absolutely necessary for getting ahead in business and social life. You can't express your ideas fully or reveal your true personality without a sure command of good English.

Question: What do you mean by a "command of good English"?

Answer: A command of good English means you can express yourself clearly and easily without fear of embarrassment or making mistakes. It means you can write well, carry on a good conversation—also read rapidly and remember what you read. Good English can help you throw off self-doubts that may be holding you back.

Question: Are there other advantages to be gained by acquiring a command of good English?

Answer: Yes! Words are actually "tools of thought." The more you learn about words and how to use them to form and express your ideas, the better your thinking becomes. For this reason a command of good English often pays off in unexpected ways.

Question: Wouldn't I have to go back to school to gain a command of good English?

Answer: No, not anymore. You can gain the ability to speak and write like a college graduate right in your own home—in only a few minutes each day.

Question: Is this something new?

Answer: Career Institute of Chicago has been helping people for many years. The Career Institute Method quickly shows you how to stop making embarrassing mistakes, enlarge your vocabulary, develop your writing ability, discover the "secrets" of interesting conversation.

Question: How do I know it works?

Answer: There are thousands of letters in my files, testimonials from people in all walks of life who have used the proved Career Institute Method to achieve amazing results. If you send in the coupon below, I will share some of these letters with you.

Question: Who are some of these people?

Answer: The Career Institute Method is used by men and women of all ages. Some have attended college, others high school, and others only grade school. The method has helped business men and women, homemakers, industrial workers, clerks, secretaries... almost anyone you can think of.

Question: How long will it take me to learn to speak and write like a college graduate, using your method?

Answer: Some people take only a few weeks to gain a command of good English. Others take longer. It is up to you to set your own pace. In as little time as 15 minutes a day, you will see quick results.

Question: How can I find out more about the Career Institute Method?

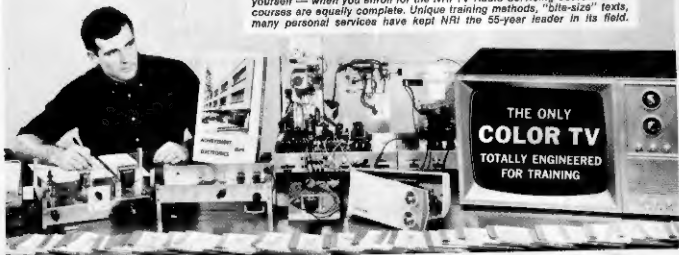

Answer: I will gladly mail you a free 32-page booklet which explains the new easy-to-follow Career Institute Method and tells you how you can gain a command of good English quickly and enjoyably at home. Send coupon, card, or letter today to Career Institute, Dept. 210-16 Mundelein, Ill. 60060.
